ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

Transforming Indian agriculture through technology, innovation, and artificial intelligence is crucial for building an Atmanirbhar Bharat, as it strengthens the nation's ability to sustain itself with resilient and efficient food systems. With climate change, unpredictable weather and rising demand for food, Indian farmers need modern tools that enhance productivity, reduce risk and ensure better income stability. Integrating digital technologies such as AI, precision farming, smart irrigation and data-driven crop management helps farmers to take decisions, use resources more efficiently and increase yields sustainably. AI-enabled platforms can connect farmers directly to markets, provide early warnings on pests and diseases and offer personalized advisory services, empowering even small and marginal farmers. By embracing these advancements, Indian agriculture can shift from traditional practices to a modern, knowledge-driven sector that supports rural development, enhances food security, and contributes significantly to the nation's economic self-reliance. The role of a researcher in a conference on "Transforming Indian Agriculture towards Atmanirbhar Bharat through Technology, Innovation and Artificial Intelligence (AI)" is to deeply investigate how emerging technologies can address real challenges faced by Indian agriculture and contribute to Atmanirbhar Bharat. A researcher critically studies existing agricultural systems, identifies gaps in productivity, sustainability, farmer welfare. It also explores how AI-driven solutions, digital tools and innovative practices can bridge these gaps. Their role involves generating new knowledge through experiments, data analysis and field trials. Then translating this knowledge into practical, scalable solutions that farmers and policymakers can adopt and to shape evidence-based policies, fostering technological empowerment in rural communities and guiding India's journey toward an Atmanirbhar Bharat
